On 5 February 1954, troops stationed in Loyang, Ch'uanchou (N 24-54, E 118-34) were enforcing strict security measures over all traffic on or passing under the Loyang Bridge (approximately N 24-57, E 118-41). Sentries were posted on the bridge, and fishing boats and small craft were required to obtain permission from the guards to sail under the bridge. Oyster fishing around the bridge, which had formerly furnished a living for most of the inhabitants north and south of the bridge, was prohibited.
